

IPA Day

AUGUST 4TH 2011

and continuing on every day everywhere

In the early 1700s Britain had a problem. Troops and British citizens living in India as part of the colonial rule did not have access to good British ale and any attempts to ship the malt British ales to them resulted in spoilage.

India Pale Ale, or IPA, was the solution. The generous amount of hops in this brew protected it from the heat and motion of the British sailing ships of the day.

IPA could have faded into history when the British occupation of India ended. But a fateful shipwreck firmly established IPA as its own style rather than a sub-style specialty brew. In 1827 a ship leaving London wrecked and damaged some of the casks of IPA on board. The recovered casks were sold in England and the unusually hoppy ale was a big hit. Soon the new brew was in demand and a new style lived on.

IPA vs BEER

"beer" represents common everyday factory beer brands.

EPIC BEER RUIN

in the 1700's...

England

India

a trip from England to India took at least 120 days.

the ship would cover over twelve thousand miles or more on the open ocean.

as many as 25% of the crew might die on the way.

by the 1800's over 15,000 barrels of beer a year were exported to India.
